The Tripoli attack, which early reports said had been launched against Colonel Qadhafi's fortress-like barracks residence and headquarters just outside Tripoli, was the culmination of a process triggered by the April 17 slaying of a British policewoman and wounding of 11 of the front's demonstrators, apparently by a gunman inside the Libyan mission in London.

WASHINGTON — The Defense Department should make greater efforts to ensure press coverage of military operations, but reporters who violate security guidelines should be barred, according to a report submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The report also urges Defense Secretary Caspar W. Such a pool, the report said, might further the goal of allowing press coverage "to the maximum degree possible consistent with mission security and the safety of U.S. forces."

Victory of Catalans in Regional Vote Upsets Spanish Socialists, Rightists

By John Darnton

New York Times Service MADRID - The nationalist Catalan Party was the decisive winner in regional elections in Catalonia last month and the victory is beginning to have an impact far beyond the question of who rules locally in the industrial area of northeastern Spain.

The surprisingly strong showing of the party, Convergence and Union, has rattled the national political parties. In particular, it dealt a blow to the main opposition party to the Socialists, the rightist Popilar Alliance, which campaigned heavily and yet performed poorly. The outcome also seemed to open up opportunities for a new and struggling center party, the Re-formist Party, which was created last year as a middle alternative to the Popular Alliance and the So-

The election returns were a sumning victory for Jordi Pujol, 53, the founder of the party and the head of the regional government, called the Generalitat. In the campaign, Mr. Pujol, a dyed-in-the-wool nationalist, argued strongly for more antonomy for Catalonia and after his re-election he said he would now be able to negotiate with Madrid "from a position of strength."

The Socialists won 41 seats, an increase on the 33 they held before but nowhere near what they had hoped for.

They were hurt by a high voter abstention rate during a quiet holi-day weekend, which kept their percentages below both the general election of 1982 and municipal elections last year.

The rightist opposition did not run four years ago. In last month's vote, it failed to draw voters from and its spokesman in the national the now-defunct Union of Demoparliament. # Cameroon Purge Under Way Hundreds Face Tribunals and Executions After Coup Try

The government has said more than 1,000 people have been arrested since April 8, when a mutiny by members of the Republican Guard, the elite 1,500member force charged with pro-tecting President Paul Biya, was put down by loyal army troops.

According to official statements, fewer than 100 people died in three days of heavy lighting. But diplo-mats and some Cameroonian officials now estimate that 500 to 1,000 soldiers and civilians were killed. Although there has been no offi-cial word about the fate of those arrested after the coup attempt, most are believed to be in detention in prisons and military camps in or near Yaounde, the capital.

Two Flags Over Belfast?

A salutary document has been signed in Dublin by the leaders of four parties repre-senting three of every four Irish voters. South and North. What distinguishes the New Ireland Forum report is its fresh approach to an old and passionate argument.

Abandoning the all-or-nothing goal of traditional Irish nationalism, the report recognizes the stubborn sense of British identity of Northern Ireland's Protestants and suggests that one way round it may be to let two flags fly over Belfast.

Parameter and the second of th

The report proposes three choices for ending Ireland's partition: a unitary state, a federal structure with two parliaments and, most as structure with two partiaments and, most promising, a British-Irish "joint authority," with dual citizenship for the North's 1.5 million residents. It envisions political equality for the Roman Catholic minority and Protestant majority, but without diminishing the latter's "Britishness."

The practical difficulties of any such remedy are, of course, formidable, and the report points no way for getting from here to there. It brushes over the vexations matter of security: Would the British police be able to cross the border into the Irish Republic, and vice versa? Still, the idea of a joint authority marks a conciliatory shift in Irish nationalist doctrine. But hard-line Unionists, enjoying a 3-to-2 majority in Northern Ireland, reflexively dismiss the report, seizing on its partisan rendering of the history of the conflict to discredit its generous vision of the future.

By contrast, the British government has conditionally welcomed this sober document. The Dublin report condemns the violence that has cost 2,300 lives since 1969, provoked 43,000 shootings and bombings and bled the economies of North and South alike. And, crucially, it recognizes that Northern Ireland's status can be changed only by consent.

There lies the difficulty. As long as the Protestant majority can veto any change, Brit-ain feels bound to respect its wishes. But Britain is not bound to be silent about such inflexibility. And it can put forward its own ideas, such as the active proposal to offer the Irish Republic a joint role in key economic and security functions.

For obvious political reasons, successive British governments have found it much easier to condemn Irish Republican terrorism than to censure the Protestant attitudes that feed the violence. The significance of the new report is that it records a heartening consensus on one side of the Irish fence. When the other side responds as reasonably, a fruitful negotiation may finally begin.

A Place Between Revenge and Recompense

ARIS — Yitzhak Shamir, the prime minister of Israel, said recently that Israel would not forget and will not forgive Germany and other European countries for what they did to the Jews in World War II. Forgiveness is not ordinarily spoken much of in international relations. It is worth some thought.

Whether Israel should forgive the Europeans is certainly for Israelis to say. The crime to be forgiven was monstrous, without historical precedent in its coldness and deliberation. It was not however, without parallel in the 20th-centur-ry history of totalitarianism.

Who forgives whom for Stalinism? There are thought to have been even more victims of Stalin than of Hitler. These were peasants killed or deliberately starved in the forced agricultural collectivization of 1929-1933, the three million to four million or more murdered in the great purge of 1936-1938, and the victims of the postwar purges, in which the East Europeans were swept up.

The people of the Soviet Union have no one to forgive because they did it to themselves. Even Communists murdered Communists; the old Bolsheviks were the first to perish in the purges, followed by the cosmopolitan leaders of the Comintern and the people who had led the prewar Communist parties of Eastern Europe. There

Should the East Europeans today — or the Afghans — forgive the Soviet Union for what the Russians have done to them? Would it make any difference if they did so? It would make a considerable difference to the Soviet Union - and to the U.S.S.R.'s rivals abroad — if the hatred of the people who live on the Soviet Union's borders were to be lifted. It constitutes a permanent By William Pfaff threat to Russian security. If the Poles were reconciled to the Soviet Union, and were willing themselves freely to guarantee that the U.S.S.R. would not be attacked from the west, there would be a fundamental and constructive change in the Soviet situation.

Stalin believed in hatred. In 1944 he said to General de Gaulle that by pushing Poland west-ward territorially — annexing its castern regions to Russia and encouraging the Poles to annex the territories up to the Oder and Neisse rivers which had included ethnic German populations — he was guaranteeing permanent hostility between the Poles and Germans. Poland has always served as a corridor for the Germans to attack Russia, he said. This corridor must be closed off.

He relied on hatred to do it.

He was wrong. He failed to anticipate that Poland might forgive Germany for what the Germans had done, and that the Germans them-selves might renounce the territories that had caused so much trouble between the two councaused so much trouble between the two countries. He failed to imagine that the Germans might ask the Poles for forgiveness, and that a German chancellor might go to Warsaw, to the ghetto, and fall upon his knees, as did Willy Brandt. There is no great love lost for Germans today in Poland, but one can reasonably say that there is an acrid forgiveness. That part of the past has been buried. There is nothing the Poles want now from Germany. There is a lot they want from Russia.

Forgiveness has changed Western Europe. Konrad Adenaper and Charles de Gaulle met in the Reims cathedral in July 1962 to ratify the reconciliation of France and Germany, ending a struggle between the two nations which had produced a century of European civil war.

When Jean Monnet, the man who invented the institutions of European community, went to West Germany in 1950 to present France's pro-posal for a coal and steel authority to control the two countries' warmaking assets, he said this:

We want to put French-German relations on an entirely new footing. He said the aim of the French proposal was, therefore, essentially political. It even had an aspect that might be called moral Chancellor Adenaner replied that he had waited 25 years for a move like this. Germans knew that their fate was bound up with that of Western Europe as a whole. He said that implementation of the plan would be his most important task. If he succeeded, he believed that his life would not have been wasted. The result of what happened then was to transform the relations of all the West European powers in a more important way than any other event since the rise of modem nationalism.

There are candidates for forgiveness today, as between India and Pakistan, Israel and the Palestinians, Africans and Afrikaners, the national factions of Lebanon. Nobility of spirit might work again, Forgiveness is no light matter. When, however, it is granted, the results may be exceptionally powerful.

It is, moreover, something for which, in the end, there may be no alternative. There are some things for which no adequate revenge is imaginable, and no recompense is possible. What then is left except to forgive?

A few years ago, the U.S. National Academy Further, it is argued, Soviet scientists make up an elite group with access to, if not real influence on, Politburo decision-makers — a group that is essential to reach on the surpassing issue of nuclear war and peace. But what the political types who control the of Sciences suspended its scientific exchanges with the Soviet Union in protest against the Kremlin's invasion of Afghanistan, its sponsorship of the suppression of Poland's Solidarity, the internal exile of Andrei Sakharov and the repression of other dissidents. Nothing has really changed in any of those departments. but the academy is now considering whether to resume exchanges. The stated reason is that many scientists are concerned over the arms race, which is something of a euphemism for being critical of the Reagan policy. American scientists, unlike their Soviet counterparts, act as individual citizens, not as soldiers of the state. They can resume exchanges for any reason - say, to eat genuine Russian borscht. But since many of the Americans who participate do so with some larger public purpose in mind, and since their participation does make political ripples, it is only fair that they be held to some account. The serious argument is that whereas it is all right in reasonably good times to show dis-favor for a reprehensible Soviet act by curtailing exchanges, it is not all right in bad times, because then every single strand of human contact and goodwill is doubly important.

Soviet exchange program surely have in mind, beyond piggybacking on American science, is to recruit the influential American scientific community to more active lobbying against the Reagan policy and the Reagan re-election campaign. They have no intention of opening channels for the infiltration of American ideas on, say, nuclear build-down. They have some experience in closing those channels.

It might have been better if, from the start, exchanges and the other civilizing bits and pieces of East-West relations had been estabished for their own sake and not made subject to manipulation for political effect. But that avenue was forsaken long ago. Is it now worth defaulting on Afghanistan, Mr. Sakharov and the other issues of original and still worthy protest - we note that the Kremlin has just stepped up its cruel assault on the Sakharovs — in order to pursue these highly limited exchange relationships? We think not.

The Poles' Surprising New Phase

By Aryeh Neier

N EW YORK — Westerners were surprised but puzzled last week when Lech Walesa and several thousand supporters joined in May Day rallies in Gdansk and a number of other Polish cities. Some people took this as a sign that Solidarity may soon re-emerge in much the same form as in 1980 and 1981. Others concluded that the May Day protests were no more than the last flames from dying embers. My own visit to Warsaw this spring persuades me that neither re-

A lot of people I encountered in Warsaw denied that their struggle against oppression ended when martial law was declared in December 1981: according to them, it merely entered a new phase. The current phase is not marked by the effort to build democratic institutions that was the essential aim of Solidarity in the 16 months prior to martial law. Moreover, May Day aside, there is little overt political protest to be seen. Nevertheless, Polish opponents of Moscow's empire and the Jaruzelski regime that serves it believe that they are making headway.

Their main aim is to enlist other Poles in "independent," underground activities. Hundreds of underground periodicals are being published more or less regularly. Scores of new titles are added annually to the already rich library of under-ground book publishing some of them in quantities that would seem respectable to Western commercial publishers. Living-room theater, un-derground cabaret and unofficial art exhibits are flourishing. Tens of thonsands of Poles attend unofficial adult education classes. The term "flying university," which antedates Solidarity, is no longer used because most of the stu-

How many people take part regularly in such independent activity? It is impossible to say for certain, but the estimates one hears in Poland range from 200,000 to about one million. The higher figure represents those who are thought to pay monthly dues to underground Solidarity; the lower number represents those who go further and spend some time each month putting out or distributing an independent book or periodical, or attending a class or in some other way acting outside the institutions of the state.

On Politics, Pasta and Water Polo

By George F. Will

W ASHINGTON — The law of averages has finally caught up with the Kremlin. After 67 years the Soviet regime has done something useful: By withdrawing its full-time professionals it has gone far toward restoring the amateur nature of the Olympics.

restoring the amateur nature of the Olympics.

Without drawing deeply on one's fund of cynicism, it is possible to question the sincerity of the Kremin's announcement, which was made with a characteristic sense of presentionality. tionality. That regime's tone of injured innocence increases in proportion as its grievances are trivial.

The day the Kremlin announced the boycott — citing concern for the salety, rights and dignity of Soviet athletes — reports reached the West that the Kremlin, not content with tormenting Andrei Sakharov, was pressing the weight of the state down on his wife, who is under investigation for "defaming the Soviet system." It is a nice question whether it is even theoretically possible to de-fame that system, but never mind. Perhaps Soviet sports czars consulted their stop watches and decided they do not have a team that can cope with the likes of Carl Lewis and Mary Decker. But obviously the main purpose of the boycott is to pay back the United States for 1980.

The Soviet boycott, announced against a background rumble of the bombing and armored offensive in Afghanistan, illustrates the Soviet sense of symmetry. The United States boycotted the Moscow Olympics to protest the rape of Afghanistan; the Kremlin is protesting organizational meeties in Los Angeles.

One grievance is that the United States will not do as the Kremlin did in 1980, when potential protestors were removed from Moscow. Furthermore, there is the problem of defections. How are you going to keep the athletes happy in Murmansk after they've seen Malibu? The Russians utter the requisite

The Russans utter the requisite homage to "Olympic ideals" and their boycott has stirred high-minded talk about "removing politics from the Olympics," an idea akin to removing pasta from fettuccine. It has even been said that "the United States started it" — "it" being the intrusion of politics into the good clean fun of the Games.

That must be news to, among oth-

That must be news to, among others, the South African government, a disagreeable regime whose unfortu-nate athletes have been banned from recent Olympics at the behest of a lot of other disagreeable regimes. Prestige and propaganda are national assets; whenever they are at stake, politics will be present.

The ancient Olympics degenerated into commercial, corrupt and violent carnivals until, in 394 A.D., they were stopped by the Roman emperor The-odosius, Sound fellow, Theodosius,

When the Olympics were rashly revived in 1896 after a merciful lapsé of 15 centuries, U.S. athletes arrived in Athens 11 days late. They had not been told that the Greeks were still using the Julian calendar. The sledding has been rough ever since. Indeed, the Olympics, like the United Nations, often have been a net subtraction from international comity because the Games replicate and sometimes magnify the world's tensions. In 1900, U.S. athletes protested the sacrilege of Sunday competition. In 1908 in London, Finns refused to walk behind a Russian flag. Americans, still smoldering from colonial injustices, refused to dip the flag to Edward VII and even protested the boots the British wore in the tug-of-war. In 1920 at Antwerp the Belgian crowd went berserk when Britain won at water polo. That was mild compared to the Soviet-Hungarian water polo match in 1956, when the water ran red with blood. Then there was the Hitlerite orgy in Berlin in 1936, and the 1972 Munich massacre. The proper Olympic ideals are not peace and harmony among nations. Sport is not about such things. Sport is about excellence. That ideal can be served by putting away the pretense of amateurism. Let the competition be between each nation's best athletes, amateur or professional.

East-bloc countries advertise their gold medals as proof that socialism, like Wonder Bread, builds strong bodies nine ways. But some odd rulings sometimes help. In 1972 officials set back the game clock, which had expired, thereby enabling the Soviet basketball team to beat the U.S. team. A basketball game between the Soviet professionals and U.S. professionals would be an occasion for our wage slaves of capital (such as Larry Bird and Bernard King) to teach the basketball-playing portion of the Soviet Union's emancipated proleiariat a thought-provoking lesson about economic determinism: Capitalism calls forth the best jump shots.

On the Olympic Boycott

The Soviet Union has given no convincing reasons for its decision not to participate in the Olympic Games in Los Angeles, but its motives seem political and vicious. en to act for what it political gain, and this violates the Olympic charter. And its decision makes questionable whether meaningful Olympic Games can be held in the future. We would hope that the Soviet Union will change its mind. However, the Olympic organizing committee should not feel obliged to make unnecessary compromises. - The Yomium Shimbun (Tokyo).

The Soviet athletes are not as good as the propaganda says. A totalitarian state does not accept this. It either comes in first or it doesn't — Die Welt (Hamburg).

Probably we can assume that the reasons given by the Russians are not far from the real ones. If they had wished to retaliate for the Western boycott of the Moscow Olympics they would have cooked up some excuse connected with U.S. activities in Central America.

How far should the Americans now try to placate the Russians in the hope of reversing the decision? Obviously the Soviet athletes are entitled to personal security from attack or harassment, but there are limits beyond which it would be wrong to curtail the rights of a free society in order to protect them from embarrassment or temptation.

If the Soviet Union wishes to participate in world events it must take the risk of exposing its citizens to other systems and other cultures. It cannot expect them to be wholly cocooned in Los Angeles.

- The Times (London).

The decision is not likely to hurt the Reagan administration. If anything, the action will fuel the anti-Soviet mood that the president has attempted to exploit. It would be better for the Soviets, having made their point about a clum-sy decision of the United States four years ago, to reverse their decision and send a team to Los Angeles this summer.

- The Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer.

[South] Korea is now preparing to host the 24th Olympiad in Seoul in 1988. At the same time we are proposing that South and North Korea form joint teams for international athletic events as well as staging regular sporting competition between them.

We call upon the Soviets to reconsider their decision to boycott the Los Angeles Games. We also urge the United States to do its best to convince Moscow to participate.

- The Korea Herald (Seoul).

We should not mince words. On [May 8], the day marking the anniversary of the victory over Nazism, chauvinism and jingoism, the Olympic ideal has received a fatal blow.

- L'Equipe (Paris).

Why the Russians have waited until now to say nyet is no great mystery. They want to put the American organizers in a spot. They wish to appear as if they have done their best to put up with the unreasonable Americans.

By announcing their decision at the same time that they are moving so mercilessly against the Afghan nationalist fighters, they are showing utter contempt for world opinion. They are saying that they will not be pressured. So be it. The Free World did the morally right thing to boycott the 1980 Moscow Olympics in protest against the invasion of Afghanistan. In comparison, the shoddy excuses Moscow has trumped up to justify its own boycott of the Los Angeles Olympics only highlight its

As for the Olympic movement, the spirit has long been souffed out — by interfering politics, by the escalating cost, by the intrusion of crass commercialization. The Olympic dream has long been over. It is time to wake up.

1934: Pravda Lectures Lenin's Widow MOSCOW -- Mme. Nadejda Krupskaia, widow of Lenin, was attacked in "Pravda" [on May 10] for criticizing Stalin and not under-rating Trotzky enough in her "Memoirs of Lenin." "She fails to bring out at all the merciless political struggle which Lenin waged against Trotzky," the paper says. "Pravda" declares that Lenin's widow fails to stress the importance of Stalin's meetings with Lenin before 1917, which, it admits, however, were few. It also contends that she is "stingy" in her treatment of the sixth party congress, which, it maintains, was "entirely directed by Stalin, although inspired by Lenin from under-ground." Mme. Lenin has never been in accord with the Stalin Bolshevists, who became masters of Russia after Trotzky's fall from grace.

out of the blue but that no American could answer them all. A lot of French tyceens, as it turned out, could.

The questious come from a quiz for the French equivalent of high-school juniors that was set up by Le Figaro Magazine and the Foreign Study in Living agency. The winning tycee class and its English teacher were to be flown by Capitol Air (which accounts for a preponderance of aeronautic questions on the test) to spend two weeks with families in Washington and New York.

According to Jacques Tierce of Le Figaro, the response was tremendous: 25,000 students in 843 bycées participated in the competition, the questions for which were printed over several weeks in Le Figaro Magazine. The finals were held in Paris last week.

Le Figaro invented the competition to attract young readers; Foreign Study in Living, a French travel firm that specializes in studies and family visits abroad, joined in as a promotional effort after suffering last year from the French government's restrictions on foreign travel. The questions for the competition were set mostly by Claude Dodin of Foreign Study in Living, who dug up 500 brain-twisters, of which 50 were selected by a jury.

The finalists were the Lycée Polyvalent Rive Gauche in Toulouse and Notre-Dame de Bury in the Val d'Oise near Paris. Marie Dominique Roussel, the English teacher at Notre-Dame de Bury, says her 27 students plunged headlong into the competition, reading dictionaries, encyclopedias and guidebooks and, the week before the finals, devoting their entire study time to the quiz.

The questions were so far out that even the examiners couldn't answer two of them: For "Name the five principal deserts in the United States," 10 answers were acceptable, while "What tree does the author of "Sanctuary" often evoke in his novels?" resulted in the admission that the examiners could not in effect see the trees for the forest. There were, they admitted, so many possible answers that any school that answered - and even those that didn't - got a point (People who set questions like that should be made to write Yoknapatawpha on the blackboard 100 times.)

For the final quiz, an oral exam crammed into an endless televi-

Second in a Long Line of Scarrys

by Mavis Guinard

ENEVA - Rehind his desk, wearing gray flannel trousers and a sweater Huck Scarry looks every inch the student, but the illustrated books he turns out are obviously the works of a profes-

At 31, Huck Scarry — whose real name is Richard, like his father, the renowned chil-dren's author and illustrator — has earned broad praise for his "Sketchbooks" of travel in balloons, barges and, recently, fishing boats. From his first book, which explored all the basics about trains, he has carried on the Scar-ry tradition of informing with a smile. "I like to explain in a fun way, but I try to do books quite different from my father's," he says carefully.

While Richard Scarry loves uproarious anties and deft simplification for young children, Huck Scarry's approach is more technical and is simed at a slightly older age-group. He shows details that rely as much on drawing talent as on research; the reader is teased to look closely and maderature relate is eased to look closely and maderature. Critics like his imaginative descriptions: in 3 balloon, the pilot sprinkles overboard grains of sand "as carefully as a pastry chaf disting sugar on a cake" or again "a balloon pilot has as much control of his destiny as a minimize autumn

Unlike his father, who works in print colors, Huck Scarry uses black and white sketches or paints in soft, mated shades. "I used to help my father color his books. This is the time-consuming donkey work - he'd just as soon do the creative part. My father uses very flat colors, painted one after another. We'd start with yellows, then oranges and reds, then have a sort of a blue day and a green day and just go through the whole book filling in." Huck Scarry has not helped color his father's books for some time now because there have been too many other commitment For the Bologna Book Pair in early April, he prepared the model of a pop-up book on medi-eval times filled with cathedrals and castles. This year, a children's encyclopedia called "Our Earth" in the United States and "The World Around Us" in England will be coming out after a successful first printing in Italian. Huck Scarry is also working on another science series that will explain how things fly, sail and

He looks forward to a trip on a tail ship for a new "Sketchbook." "It depends on the pub-lisher now. I'm just waiting for the green light to go." Scarry's face lights up with a delighted grin. "This is work I enjoy the most. It allows me to go our on an adventure and explain what I see to my readers. It's much more lively than library research." The "Sketchbooks," however, do not sell as well as the science books. Those are the real breadwinners. The toughest was the encyclopedia."

Whether done from life or from research Huck Scarry's books have enabled him to catch up with an interrupted formal education. Born in Connecticut, he grew up in a house on a Ridgefield farm "very much like the ones my father draws — with a horse in the backyard, cows and a chicken coop."

Then there was a move to Westport where he learned to sail and "went to the beach all the time." The third family move came when he was 15. Meant as a temporary move to get close to the Swiss mountains, the Scarrys liked this country so well that they stayed on Huck Scarry took to skiing and hiking, but in school, language was a problem. "In my French school, the foreign kids mostly spoke English. The scholastic level of the second school I went to simply was not very good."

So, at 17, he gave up formal education to study graphic art for a couple of years in nne (picking up French as a bonus) and went on to art school in Florence (learning Italian) then studied etching and engraving with William Hayter in Paris. Moving to New York, he started to work as his father had, coloring other people's books. While in New York he felt his real home was in Europe, and he soon returned to Switzerland. working as a book designer for an American publishing firm in Lucerne.

After this work, which was almost an apprenticeship, he jumped at an offer in Lausanne of a better-paid, part-time job designing a trade magazine for the Swiss watch industry. The rest of the day was for his own projects.

A first book, "Steam Train Journey," was followed by "On Wheels" and "On the Road," first appearing in England, then translated into several languages. Take most boys, I've always been fascinated by anything that rolls on wheels," he says. "I thought it would be as much fun to draw trains as to play with model

A wife, two babies and 10 titles later, Huck Scarry is smug in a flat in the heart of Geneva. His work leaves hitle free time, he says. "Basically, I work every day, occasionally taking a day off for a hike in the mountains in summer or maybe a walk on snowshoes in winter, Huck Scarry.

touring off the beaten track through fields, getting out into nature and scenery.

"I love old cars and I had an old Bentley, in which we did a number of rallies. But I had to sell it as it was becoming a bit of a burden, requiring a run every weekend, repairs and so on. It's just the type of hobby that needs a lot Scarry's office is a tiny room free of artistic cluster. He works methodically at a slant-topped desk that recently replaced an old garden table, his two dogs curled at his feet. Paints and pencils are stashed away in an antique ing case, papers and files tucked out of sight. A small collection of reference books stands nearby. "I share my father's reference library and, within strolling distance, I can use three excellent libraries. Geneva is a tremendoes place for research - I can find any book I need, in almost any language."

Scarry has become a Swiss citizen. "I spent 15 years in the States, and 16 here, so I became Swiss — just as a Swiss might have become American in a reverse situation." He has put down strong roots, recently taking part in a typical Swiss campaign to collect signatures demanding traffic-free streets in the Old City

As he talks, a small, blonde girl with a wide smile - Scarry's 5-year-old daughter Fiona - rushes into the office. Seeing that her father is still busy, she settles into a corner, Scarryfashion, with crayons and paper.

Spring Has Sprung: Lawn Care

by Joan Lee Faust

AWNS are turning green and homeowners are beginning their springtime routines. Out come the fertilizer spreaders and power mowers to undo what winter storms did and to prepare lawns for summer. Although lawn care follows a standard ritual, some problems have increased while others have waned.

Once-serious weeds, crabgrass and dandelions are now conquered by use of pre-emer-gent herbicides, which are sometimes available in combination with lawn fertilizers. Read the label directions carefully.

Another weed, wild onion, persists, but it succumbs to a herbicide foam that can be safely spewed out of pressurized spray cans onto individual plants. Chickweed, a tougher weed problem, is best controlled in fall with combination herbicides.

Lawn professionals at U.S. agricultural universities keep learning new refinements on lawn care. What follows is an update.

F ertilizer: Applications of lawn fertilizer can begin shortly or, even better, be delayed until fall. According to Howard Kemmerer, agricultural agent in Fairfield County. Connecticut, "We are going with the recomendation of lawn research ty of Rhode Island. There they have found that application of lawn fertilizer should be made in late May or the first part of June, again Sept. 1 and finally Nov. 15. If an order of priority for fertilizer applications was set, I would rate them as follows: The most important is Sept. 1; then Nov. 15 and the third choice would be late May to early June,"

Research has shown that the September application boosts the growth of grass rhizomes, the root-like stems. With the November application, a gardener gets a higher accumulation of nutrients in the grass plants to take them through the winter. Also this grass will green up more quickly in spring. If the lawn is fed in spring, do it in late May after the first flush of growth. It will take the grass through the summer months and produce better turf. Too much fertilizer in early spring for that so-called quick green-up makes grass succulent and more susceptible to disease.

Many lawn fertilizers are packaged and la-beled according to the area covered. When applying fertilizer, use one pound (454 grams) of actual nitrogen per 1,000 square feet (about

Grubs: Beetle grubs — the larvae of many insect species, including Japanese beetles, May beetles or June bugs and European chafers - are causing increasing concern as they chew off anchoring grass roots and de-stroy lawns. Grubs initiate a secondary problem: nocturnal feeding by skunks, moles and raccoons, which dig up lawn patches to eat

Knowledge of the beetles' life cycle is essential for control. Mature beetles feed on garden plants from late June to October. The female

There is mixed opinion when to apply grubcontrol measures. Many professionals contend that August is the best time because the grubs are smaller and more susceptible to nitrogen. This practice also reduces the need for fertilizer. Clippings are mostly water and pesticides. Others say the time is now.

lays her eggs usually in lawn grass roots or pastures. When eggs hatch, larvae move down into the soil below the frost line and start their move upward in spring to pupate and emerge

There is mixed opinion when to apply grub-control measures. Many professionals contend that August is the best time because the grubs are smaller and more susceptible to pesticides. Others say the time is now. In either case, only one grub-proofing application should be made

B are Patches: Although spring is not the best time to put in a lawn, something must be done if there is bare ground. Sodding is a good approach, but it is essential to prepare the soil for the sod the same way you would for seeding. Seeding can be successful if a preemergent crabgrass control is put down first Use a crabgrass preventive that will not affect grass-seed germination. A major problem of a spring-seeded lawn is a dry summer, which is the chief cause for lawn failure. Unless artificial irrigation can be assured, spring lawn seeding is questionable Sod, on the other hand, has some roots. It is watered thoroughly until longer roots can grow to anchor it down to the prepared soil.

Mowing Height: According to Aubrey Hampton, senior agricultural agent for Bergen County, New Jersey, "We say not to cut off more than two inches of new growth at a time and to keep the lawn at two inches throughout the season. This may mean mowing the lawn two or three times a week, depending upon the rate of growth. "If you let the grass grow to five inches and cut it back to two, you are going to have a bleached-out appearance of the lawn. The grass will be very succulent and susceptible to intense light. In effect you are stunting the grass plants. It is also important to keep equipment sharp so the blade does not shred grass

What is to be done with the grass clippings? Don't throw them away. Allow them to accumulate on the lawn to decompose and restore term used to describe the layer of stems, crown tissue, roots and rhizomes that accumulate on the soil surface and reduce air circulation. Long, wet clippings should always be raked up

Watering: One of the biggest problems in lawn care is the misuse of water. With a hose, the correct amount of water is one inch to fill up six inches of soil and encourage deep roots. Automatic sprinklers can be trouble some. If the sprinklers are set to come on for about 15 minutes every morning, that is just enough to wet grass leaves and build up a thatch layer.

Actually no water at all is fine, but gardeners should not get into the routine of watering once a week in a dry spring and then fail to keep it up all summer. This practice puts stress on plants. It is all or nothing. The grass won't burn out; it goes dormant to protect itself in a dry summer. It may look terrible, but it will

It Was a Dark And Stormy Prize

AN JOSE, Cabifornia — It lacked the simplicity of that classic opener, "It was a dark and stormy night," but Steve Garman's writing was judged so had that it took first prize in a competition for the opening sentence to the worst-imaginable

This was Garman's entry:
"The lovely women-child Kas was mercilessly chained to the cruel post of the warriorchief Beastx, with his barbarian tribe now stacking wood at her nubile feet, when the strong clear voice of the poetic and heroic Handsomas roared, 'Flick your Ric, crisp that chick, and you'll feel my steel through your last

A self-described "undistinguished panel of judges" has named Garman, city manager of Pensacola, Florida, the winner of the 1984 Bulwer-Lytton Fiction Contest, which celeprates bad writing.

Second place in the competition went to Joseph Parko, a Georgia State University professor, who wrote:

"Lady Olivia's heart fluttered within her breast like a tethered bird in a cage as the mysterious stranger bent to kiss her hand, his smoldering dark eyes reflecting the baleful fire of the Ranchipur ruby that tossed like some illfated crystalline craft upon the passion-swept crest of her heaving white bosom."

The judges were mainly veteran composition teachers who "have read a lot of rotten paose, most of it written in all sincerity by students." said Scott Rice, an English professor at San lose State University and organizer of the three-year-old contest.

it was started to help Rice's students produce good writing by learning to recognize bad. Since then, it has attracted bad writing from every American state and, this year, from 20 foreign countries, including Kenya, New Zealand, and China. There were about 14,000 entries this year.

Last year's competition drew about 10,000 entries. The winner was Gail Cain of San Francisco with this opener: "The camel died quite suddenly on the second day, and Selena fretted sulkily and, buffing her already impeccable nails - not for the first time since the journey began - pondered smidely if this would dissolve into a vignette of minor inconences like all the other holidays spent with

Some of the entries will be published in paperback by Pengnin Books under the title, "It Was a Dark and Stormy Night." As Rice says about the contest, "We'd like to think the prize gives new meaning to a phrase popular bere in Silicon Valley: Garbage in, garbage

Garman, who will receive a word processor as first prize, brushed off his victory as something that was "really very easy to do. I guess I'm just one of those people who have a gift for bad writing."

Asked for advice to would-be terrible writers. Garman said, "Read Bulwer-Lytton. He wrote a book tified The Last Days of Pompen," which was just recently made into a television movie. It's something to think about."

Edward George Earle Bulwer-Lytton, an English 19th-century novelist, playwright and political figure, inspired the contest with the opening sentence to his 1830 novel. "Paul Clif-

"It was a dark and stormy night, the rain fell in torrents except at occasional intervals, when it was checked by a violent gust of wind which swept up the streets (for it is in London that our scene lies), rattling along the house-tops, and fiercely agitating the scanty flame of the lamps that struggled against the darkness."

Restaurants: Hold the French Fries

by Patricia Wells

ARIS - Even in Paris, every now and then diners crave something other than French food. And while the choice of ethnic restaurants here is grand, the quality leaves much to be desired.

Diners in search of a simple, vibrant ethnic meal will want to try Sandade, a small Portuguese restaurant hidden on a quiet side street not far from Les Halles. Warm and familial, Saudade offers a cozy sort of auberge decor, a varied menu and prices that leave you feeling

To my taste, Portuguese cuisine boasts three real stars; bacalhan the popular, assertive salt cod; pão de broa, the dense, yeast-raised com bread, and some lively red wines, ranging from the spicy, medium-bodied Serradayres to those from the Dão region, which produces subtle reds that are full of character and age remarkably ell, to, of course, the king of all, port. At Sandade, you'll find all of these, along with country soups and hams, and a variety of traditional seafood and meat preparations.

The Portuguese are said to have 365 ways to cook salt cod, one for every day of the year. That would be a bit much for most of us, but taken in small portions from time to time, the fish can be a delight. Saudade offers just six preparations, of which I'd strongly recom-mend the escondidinho version, a simple and rewarding peasant dish that combines thick slabs of perfectly desalted cod smothered with tomatoes, onions and olive oil, then roasted. (For some reason, I find just about anything smothered with onions and tomatoes and olive oil — be it chicken, pork or even other vegetables — irresistible.)

A second version, called bacalhau a joão do Porto, is smothered with raw onions, then sprinkled with garlic-laced olive oil and whisked under the grill. While less esthetic than the tomato version, gastronomically speaking it's equally appealing.

First courses here are limited — the soups are popular although I find them a bit bland — so best bets include a platter of subjector paper-thin slices of spicy smoked pork sausage that's been marinated with garlic and red wine, then smoked; or the gambas a Saudade, giant shrimp sautéed in a vibrant sauce rich in garlic, spice and oil. Less interesting is the rather bland and lukewarm berbigão a Portuguesa, a bowl of tiny clams in a sauce of tomatoes, onions, peppers and parsley. Portugal is known for its high-quality suckling pig, and the pork at Sandade is indeed better than you'll find most anywhere. Try the popular Portuguese dish known as carne de porco Alentejana, a blend of cubed pork filets marinated in red wine and sautéed with tiny clams. It's a strange-sounding combination indeed, but a savory one.

Throughout the meal, plan to munch on the incredibly dense (but not sink-to-the-stomach heavy) Portuguese corn bread, which comes from a charming little bread and pastry shop, Belem, at 47 Rue Boursault in Paris's 17th arrondissement. Waiters offer seconds, even thirds, of this chewy bread, perfect for soaking in the wine-

One of the newest restaurants on the ethnic scene is the brigh sleek and welcoming Kinngawa, a Japanese restaurant name after its Kyoto chef, Kiyoshi Kinugawa. Although Issé, the popula Japanese restaurant at 56 Rue Sainte Anne, temains a persons favorite, it's hard to find fault with the fresh fish and shellfish:

Those in search of a real bargain should try Kinugawa at lunch when it serves a copious 70-franc menu that might include a perfect! grilled sole, soup, an assortment of raw fish and a bowl of rice. For few francs more, try the stunning bento lunch, a takeoff on the compact picnic-style meal sold at Japanese train stations. There's bit of everything in the almost-100-beautiful-to-eat bento, including wonderful blend of egg crepe and raw salmon, superb raw fatty tun and delicious vinegared rice served in the shape of a fan. Service an the lovely contemporary blue and white decor are both impeccable Kinugawa is adjacent to the back entrance of the Hotel Meurice.

An ethnic entry worth ignoring is Carpaccio, a new Italian restat Arant in the Royal Monceau Hotel on the Right Bank. It's no often that you pay 300 francs for an unsatisfying meal and leave wit the certainty that you could have eaten much, much better for a thir the price at home. But such is the case with Carpaccio, a pseudo so: of restaurant with snippy, snobbish waiters who do their best tintimidate, who curl up their nose when you order pasta but not meat or fish course, who become indignant when you decline desser

Several dishes here are appealing — the parchment-thin slices of lean raw beef, or carpaccio, are absolutely fresh and delicious, but overpriced at 120 francs (albeit with what's billed as a white truff. sauce), and the starter of raw, fresh artichokes sprinkled with lemo juice and slices of excellent Parmesan cheese is refreshing - but the blend is wrong: Your palate is left with an almost-stinging, bitte

And if a much-raved-about Italian restaurant can't make stunning pasta or risotto, what good is it? At Carpaccio, you'll find that risott with scampi is dull and uninteresting, and if you order pappardelle. funchi porcini, you'll have to go on a mushroom hunt of your own the find the parsimoniously scattered porcini.

In the Wake of the Argonauts

by Kerin Hope

AGASAI, Greece - Fifteen adventurers in a Bronze Age-style open boat have set sail from this ancient harbor on a 3,000-mile (4,800-kilometer) voyage to test the legend of Jason and the Argonauts' quest for the Golden Fleece.

Powered by an international crew of oars-men, the 54-foot (16.4-meter) Argo slipped away from the same beach as its mythological ancestor. A crowd of more than 2,000 Greeks cheered last week as Tim Severin, the expedition's leader, poured a bottle of red wine into the sea to mark the start of the voyage. It was a libation to the ancient sea god Poseidon for a safe journey for the Argo through the Aegean to the Black Sea and Soviet Georgia.

"This voyage could turn out to be hard work if the winds are against us and we have to row most of the way," said Severin. The four-month expedition in the pine vessel is intended to test Severin's theory that the Argonaut legend was based on tales told by the first Greek sailors who explored the Black Sea

"It's the earliest voyage epic that exists in Western literature," the 43-year-old Boton said. "According to the story, Jason set sail a generation before the Trojan War — that's could survive," said Costas Fiskardos, a 60 thought to be around 1260 B.C." thought to be around 1260 B.C."

The modern Argo was built by Greek craftsmen on the Aegean island of Spetsai. It was designed by a British naval architect after Severin studied Homer's Odyssey and archaeological finds to work out the likely size and shape of a swift passenger galley in the Bronze

"In fact the boat is very seaworthy and handles well — we rowed 26 miles in one day on the way here from Spetsai," Severin said. The ship, gaily painted in blue, white and terra-cotta, is built entirely of wood. It carries a single square linen sail and is steered by an oar attached to the stern.

Like ancient seafarers, the modern adventurers will sail close to shore, navigating from the landscape. They will beach the boat each night and sleep and eat ashore, Severin said.

mike like this. Hold it like a seltzer bottle." Pretty soon he was moving around like a little tiger. And he started to develop that character of his, the loser who comes back to win. That's Broadway Danny Rose."

Gordon and D'Lugoff were recalling a sweetly remembered time in the nightlife of New York, a setting evoked in Allen's latest film. "Broadway Danny Rose," in which the comedian satirizes the world that nurtured his humor. After its U.S. premiere, the film has come to Europe and will be shown out of competition at the Cannes Film Festival, which starts this weekend.

"Broadway Danny Rose" is about a time when the agents and the flacks hustled happily because nightclubs flourished, a time when three fast shows for a second-line comic at three separate Catskill Mountains bungalow colonies were a good weekend's work, a time when they hung around Lindy's until all hours when they thing around Lindy's that all folins of the morning simply because, as Gordon remembers, "God forbid you should go home."

The Blue Angel was a special place for comics and so were the Village Vanguard, the Bitter End and "my place, the Village Gate," recalls D'Lugoff, noting that these were clubs where comedians such as Mort Sahl, "Fat Jack" Leonard, Lennie Bruce, Dick Gregory, Alan Arkin and Mike Nichols and Elaine May Alan Arkin and Mike Nichols and Elaine May were mixed, often not gently, with jazz.
The Village Gate and the Vanguard were also where the young Allen worked in the late 1950s, a comic who had been a writer for other comics, so frightened about standing in front of audiences that he had to be reassured between shows, according to Gordon; a comic who had to be told how to move on stage.

"I used to yell at him, Who told you you got to stay in one spot?" "D'Lugoff remembers. Allen was one of a pack of young, uncertain comedians, slightly worn singers and their somewhat frenctic agents who are portrayed so vividly in "Broadway Danny Rose." In the film, Allen reverses his early professional life a bit, becoming one of those marginal agents who booked marginal comedians like himself. In the period depicted in "Broadway Danny Rose," 52d Street, "Swing Street," was music street, home to Leon & Eddie's and Tony's and other jazz clubs and restaurants. Editie Condon's was two blocks away on 54th and Han-son's drugstore up on 50th Street was open well past 2 A.M. because it was where the showeirls from the Latin Quarter went to meet their boyfriends. Still later, in Gus and Andy's bebind the Palace, the novelty acts would get together — dancers, xylophonists, jugglers, performers whose careers depended on incredibly intelligent animals — and would sit around talking about their most recent two-a-days, about "maybe getting a gig in the moun-tains provided they had cars and could trans-port other acts as well," according to Shelly Rothman, an agent who moans because "Then you had 15, maybe 16 dance teams you could book. Today? Nothing."

The Copacabana and the Latin Quarter, Bon Soir, Basin Street East, the Paradise and Havana Madrid, even Bop City, were on their glitzy up-sides, late-hour magnets for the showgards and the small-time and very obvious hoodlums looking to be on the fringes of glamour, says Irving Zussman, a press agent and Broadway character who confesses that he "once had a piece of a joint called La Conga, that 'the boys' liked to frequent."

Some of these clubs and jazz joints, places like Eddie Condon's, for example, were either rumored or known to be own gangsters, either openly or silently; Frank Cos-tello, one of the more well-known underworld figures of the time, was a regular chibgoer. But in this time of the hustle, such a circumstance was regarded as a simple fact of life; the cost of "protection" and the repayment of exorbitant loans were regarded simply as added business expenses. In any case, "the boys" did not spend their time as they do in "Broadway Danny Rose" -- terrorizing and chasing Allen.

The good time, the best of times for these men was the 1950s, going on into the early '60s, a time of many split-week engagements, of 30 to 40 hotels in the mountains crying for talent. It was a time when comics, funny men like Jackie Miles, Billy Vine, Red Buttons, Phil Foster, Morty Gunty, Corbett Monica, Buddy Hackett, Gene Baylos and "Fat Jack" Leonard were to be found around slabs of cheesecake at Lindy's center table, bouncing gags off each other, performing for each other, topping each other, "but always looking left," according to Rollins, Woody Allen's manager and producer, but once a Lindy's denizen himself.

Why left? That's where the managers and agents sat. That's the way it was. Comics in the center, like the orchestra, agents left, music people to the right," says Rollins, who appears in the film as one of a group of comedians chatting around a table at the Carnegie Delicatessen. "Only it wasn't the Carnegie then, it was Lindy's." "Of course it was Lindy's," says Max Gordon. "It wasn't what went on. It was just that it was there. You came there, you sat, you schmoozed. It was nice because I was your then and I could eat at 3, 4 o'clock in the

"You wanted to be with your own, stay with your own," says Rothman. "Jerry Lewis woul do his whole act in the restaurant. A crazy mar We'd watch him. We wouldn't bother with the others. Singers didn't talk to dancies, dancie didn't talk to comics. We stayed with our own We didn't mingle."

The agents who booked not only the club but the mountains as well, jockeying to ge their singers and comics and dancers on th same bill with a hot headliner - fellows suc as Jimmy Mark, Henry Stern, Jack Sega Charlie Rapp, Shelly Rothman and Johnn Pransky — might be there too, according to Pransky, who has been an agent since 1928 We had good times then. It wasn't as if yo had to book one or two acts. You had so mucgoing, it was like the insurance business. Yo worked seven days a week, around the clock Today the action is Atlantic City," he say: with what's left over going to Vegas and th mountains, a few to Pennsylvania.

"The Woody Allen type of agent was a fac of life," says Mike Hall, a press agent for 4 years, who handles the Concord these days The smaller acts, the novelty acts were a fac of life. You had the bungalow colonies and the smaller hotels to fill. It didn't make any differ ence how small it was, it had to have a Saturda; night show. So you booked them and you has to have small-time bookers. Everybody know agents like that. Woody exaggerated, but he'

on talk about blind xylophonists?" say. Y Shelly Rothman, another agent. We have one, Pierce Knox. He was terrific. Got a lot o work. And Gloria Parker. She worked doing musical glasses; she works today doing the

"Woody knew this world as well as I did," says Rollins, "because he was as much a part o it as I was'

And Johnny Pransky remembers Woody Allen because he was Corbett Monica's agent and went to Allen "to buy some material." Was it any good?

"I don't honestly remember," he replies. Max Gordon says that Allen gradually improved and was booked into the Village Vanguard as well as the Blue Angel. Gordon say: that he would even go to a competitor, the Bitter End, to watch Allen work.

He still likes to watch Allen work, he says, as do most of the men whose era "Broadway Danny Rose" delineates. But that is secondary to their main concern, which is still getting work for their clients. "What we need is another Ed Sullivan," says i

A Guide to Tipping Tactics Around the World

by John Vinocur

ARIS - There is an extraordinary fat red volume in many French homes and offices called the Guide to Protocol and Manners. It is really, in a subliminal way, a Michelin of middle-class insecurities, but no matter. For a story line, it offers a young man named Patrice, driven by an almost morbid fear of the faux pas, and a certain Monsieur Blancpain, who tries to buff Patrice up to the sheen of someone knowing in which order to greet the bishop of Orleans and the Turkish ambassador at a garden party.

With the metaphysics squeezed out, Patrice and M. Blancpain are Candide and Pangloss all over again. Voltaire sought truth, brevity and method; all I wanted from Patrice and his mentor was a line on the well-educated tip.

After 599 pages of constant admonition, our instruction amounts to M. Blancpain's telling Patrice that when game is distributed after a day's shooting. "It is of general and obligatory usage to offer a gratuity to the gamekeeper."

A little later, Parrice's fiancée, the dark-haired Sophie, is informed that if she joins a stag hunt and is honored by receiving the hoof, the whipper-in indeed merits a little something. "Formerly," the book says, "it was a louis d'or; these days one asks a member of the hunt about the proper sum." As for specific amounts, nothing. Although a fellow of modest resources, Patrice, we are told, "is neither stingy nor profitigate, and knows what's necessary."

Here is the truth in all its brutality, and it's that there is really no total wisdom about tips; at best, vague counsel exists, not certainty, and with it a considerable area of dispute. The Good Manners Guide can reprint a condolence letter from Charles de Gaulle to the wife of a man he may not have known terribly well, and it is a masterpiece, a model of gracious imprecision. Change the departed's name, and you're ready to plagiarize elegant bereavement.

But the book cannot tell what Mme. de Ganlie tipped her hairdresser, or whether the general considered, as M. Blancpain does, that it is in bad taste to tip employees of the national railways because they have state functionary status.

There may be some satisfaction for people wondering about who merits what in knowing that the subject was just as uncomfortable for Dickens, Balzac and Proust.

Dickens was a hard-liner, insisting that when the service is included in the bill, there is no reason to add anything even if the servitor lingers expectantly. Balzac took a middle-of-the-road position, writing that the decent man would never dodge tipping coachmen, "bath boys" or anyone bringing a present. Proust was a prodigal, a softy, and overtipped to the point of embarrassment.

All of this concern, this malaise, has the gravity of a doctoral thesis, Indeed, a cultural historian like Jean-Paul Aron, not one to leave Hegel and dialectics alone for long, found tipping full of the stuff of domination and submission. He found it complex enough to wonder who in the relationship is really the master and who the slave. In traveling around Europe the last few years, I've come to the conclusion that, as far as tips go, you're often a little of both. The slave, when you wind up feeling assamed after tipping people you wanted to give nothing; the master, if the tip is equally unmerited, but when your eyes show it and the person's on the receiving end do

My formula for avoiding both awkward states is trying to avoid all finesse in the matter. During a trip through several commies, it's an exhausting and hopeless business trying to remember if Danish taxis have their tip included in the fare, or if an usher at the Comedie Française should not, technically, receive a tip because it is a national theater.

So, herewith a few basic recommendations that, in Europe at least, avoid the Guide to Protocol and Manners, but would resolve the dealing with the gamekeepers and the whippers in if you encounter them: Figure out which bill or coin in the local currency most closely approximates $1 or 50 cents, and use them as you would in the United States.

Following the theory, people in hotels, barbershops, railway stations and airports get tipped roughly what they'd get tipped in the United States. Forget getting too involved with percentages; your instinct will get it right in the long run, with a few rises and dips into the master and slave categories.

There are local variants, of course, but the point is that the locals mselves are never exactly manimous on the just mean, and the slickest Swiss broker doesn't know what to do when he gets to Iceland. If you are with a party of six, do you multiply by six the fivefranc coins you'd normally give the person at the cloakroom? I do not know. M. Blancpain does not know. And Marcel Proust, the tipping neurotic, could not have told us either. So relax.

The other recommendation involves restaurants. It is a rare place in Europe now that does not have a 15-percent service charge added to the bill. More than a century ago, Dickens seemed annoyed that waiters wanted the same amount all over again, and although this is no longer the case, something is expected. You can round the bill off generously, or less so, but no one nowhere is expecting anything like what's already on the tab. Usually there's no doubt that service is included; but making sure by asking is hardly a hayseed gesture.

A small caution: The one very hick-ish reflex that is definitely not appreciated is dumping on a waiter or a taxi driver the accumulated very small change of a few weeks' traveling. In Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries, where there are little coins the size of a pea and worth next to nothing, the gift of a goodbye handful to a cabby or porter at an airport is cloddish.

Although M. Blancpain makes no provisions for such a contretemps, the coins, when thrown hard at you at short range, resemble buckshot, and sting.

@ 1984 The New York Times

The following guide offers suggestions on ap-propriate levels of tipping in the countries listed. In some cases, when neighboring countries have similar tipping practices they have been grouped under one heading. In many places, inflation will very soon outdate exact figures. This is the first part of a series; the next part will appear May 18.

BRITAIN

The 1984 edition of The Good Food Guide refers to the British method of service charges and tipping as "arbitrary, antiquated and dis-creditable." The publishers of the guide, the Consumers' Association, hope to introduce special insignias to indicate hotels that want to see tipping and service charges abolished. The guide suggests that tipping could disappear within a few years if governments and tourist authorities put pressure on hotels and ustan-rants to discourage the practice. Until that happy day, the following is a guide to tipping in Britain.

Arrival/Hotel

Porter at airport, 50 pence (about 70 cents) a suicase, porter at railway station, 25 to 35 pence a suitesse. Doorman, carrying baggage from taxi to front desk, 50 to 75 pence at a maximum priced horel. £1.50 at a luxury hotel. Bellman, carrying baggage to room, 50 peace a bag at a medium-priced hotel, 75 peace at a hunny hotel. For other choses the bellman may perform — taking away landdry, delivering packages to reception — 75 pence to £1.50. It is not customary to leave a tip for the chambernot customary to leave a top for the chamber-maid, but if your stay has been particularly long and you are pleased with the service, £3. If she has been especially helpful in arranging mending or sewing, 75 pence to £1.50. Nor is it customary to tip the concerne or manager unless he has gone out of his way to secure hard-to-come by theater or sports tickets, in which case 10 percent of the total cost is correct. Many husery hotels add a service charge that is divided among the staff.

For a five-minute ride in the center of the city, 12 to 15 percent of the fare. A ride into the center from Heathrow airport would cost about £18, on top of which you would be expected to give a tip of £3 to £4

Restaurants

It is not usual to tip the head waiter unless he has made a special effort to find a good table and takes extra care. For a meal costing, say, £65 for two, a £3 to £6 tip world be acceptable. The waiter receives 10 to 15 percent of the bill, depending on the quality of service. It is not usual to tip the wine waiter; but if you have chosen an expensive wine, decanted at table, a tip of £1. Again, the waiter who carves the salmon or roast does not expect a tip, but if he seems deserving, 50 to 75 pence.

Personal Services

At the barber's, to the person who cuts your hair, 12 to 15 percent; to the person who washes it, 25 to 75 pence. In beauty parlors, 12 to 15 percent. Gnide

For a tour bus guide, £1 to £1.50; for a guide who shows you and a companion around for three hours, £2 to £3.

FRANCE

Tipping in France is made relatively simple by two coms that solve most, but not all, problems. They are the 5-frane and 10-franc pieces, and you can deal with virtually any situation, shorter cab rides excluded, by having a pocketful of them. (The 5-franc piece, with franc at about eight to a dollar, is worth about 62 cents.)

Arrival/Hotel

If you give a porter 10 francs a bag, he'll be happy; a doorman who gets a taxi for you should also get 10, and you might subsequently be addressed as admiral, ambassador or excellency. Keep cool when two bellmen and a doorman surround your taxi as you are about to leave the hotel, each carefully lifting one item or opening a single door or lid. It's an ancient minuet, admirable in its orchestration, but one that should leave you cold. The doorman gets his 10-franc piece, and the two or three bellmen — the world record is four, set in May 1982 at the Hotel Richemond in Geneva on a very slow Thursday atternoon — get only the per-bag total you would have given a single emissary. Smile, get in the cab and know you've behaved with admirable firmness and grace. Concierges can be rewarded for really maisual services (such as getting you a table at Taillevent the same day), but it's pointless to tip for something like making a reservation at the Lido: They do it 15 times a week and it's part of the job.

For a long handin from the airport, about 15 percent. The rule goes off a bit in town: Short hops are a couple of francs tacked onto the meter charge.

Restaurants are a bit complicated by initials like T.T.S.C. - all taxes and service included on many bills and menus. If it isn't clear and some places fudge the issue - ask directly

Personal Services

Barbers and beauticians get tips, of course. Follow the 15-percent rule of thumb. In beauty salons where an apprentice washes your hair, they get something smaller, 5 or 10 francs, depending on your mood. The same coms will do for people parking your car, although the eyes of le voiturier at Maxim's will turn to ice unless he gets something like 25 francs. Cloak-room personnel should get 5 francs an item if you're feeling grand; the French often get away

At the bottom of the scale are the slaves of Tips on Tipping darkness, the ushers in movie houses who le your tickets and kind of point you at a row. They're worth a franc or two. Most cinemas post a sign saying that the ushers get no other

In gas stations, a franc or two is customary when the tank is filled.

Tips on Tipping

France is a supple place and you won't get beaten with a baguette if you're a franc or two off here and there. With all his other neuroses, Proust confessed to being unnecessarily weighed down by the issue of the just tip. The French themselves, in fact, tend to be wary of specifics of the variety decreeing how much to give the lamplighter — 14 bobruks along the lower peninsula, and 12 in the interior zones, although never more than the droshky driver.

WEST GERMAN

In West Germany tips are considered a bonus and should be given as a reflection of good service. A 15-percent service charge is included in any restaurant bill from the most humble to the most luxurious establishment and most Germans add no more than 5 percent to that if service is included. The general rule is that, if the house has taken 15 percent, the waiter gets a little more if the service has been really good. So, on a 180-franc bill including the 15 percent, throw down 4 or 5 francs once your change is returned. If it's a hot-shot, genuinely good and ouinely expensive meal in a fine restaurant, the additional offering ought to be 50 or 100 francs. Tip a captain only if he's really done something for you. The same goes for sommeliers - have they recommended a special santerne, or touted you off something disastrous? It's up to you to decide how much the advice is special task.

Arrival/Hotel

At the hairdresser, give 2 DM each to the cople who wash hair, do manicures and the like. 3 to 5 DM to the person who cuts, sets and combs out, another 3 to 5 DM for the person who does permanents or hair coloring. The barber gets 5 DM for a wash and haircut, another 2 DM for each special service. If a separate person washes, 2 for him and 3 for the barber (in luxury salons 5 DM). Guide ' in neighboring countries, see remarks at end.

The porter gets from 2 (modest; about 75 cents) to 5 (generous) Dentsche marks a bag, as does the bellman at your hotel. Give the doorman 2 DM a bag, and 5 for a service such as getting a taxi in the rain. No tip is necessary for the chambermaid unless your stay is more than five days, in which case 10 to 15 DM a week

For special chores, such as picking up laundry, 2 DM; for more difficult or unpleasant chores, 5. The same scale applies to bellmen. In a luxury hotel, the tip would be 10 DM for a

A service charge of 15 percent is included in the price of a tour, but a tip of 2 to 5 DM is always appreciated. A special guide receives no tip, just the sum agreed upon beforehand, but if something special is done add 5 to 10 DM.

These practices also apply in Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, Switzerland and Austria. In the Netherlands and Switzerland treat the unit of currency — the guilder and the Swiss franc — about as you would a Deutsche mark. In Belgium and Luxembourg 50 francs approximates a 2-DM tip, and in Austria 10 to 15 schillings is the equivalent. In East Germany tips are not expected, but anything you give will be very much appreciated. Only Western currency is accepted in Intourist Hotels and Intershops: elsewhere, if you give dollars, quarters or other Western money in small bills or change, you will probably get better service.

SCANDINAVIA

The basic unit of currency in Denmark and Norway, the krone, and in Sweden, the krona, is worth variously 10 to 14 cents. The Finnish markka equals 17 cents.

DENMARK

Tips are included in hotel and restaurant bills and taxi drivers include tips in their charges. It is common practice to pay for special service, but on the whole tips are rarely given. Charges for railway porters are fixed, and there is no need to tip hairdressers or theater and cinema ushers. If a hotel manager or taxi driver renders a special service, he may be given a tip at the customer's discretion; 10 percent of the bill would probably not offend.

SWEDEN

People generally inform you in advance what to pay for service, including tip, but there are exceptions. Arrival/Hotel

For the porter at the airport, tip 2 to 3 kronor for each piece of baggage if he carries a substantial weight, unless he specifies ahead how much it will cost. The doorman at a huxury hotel would expect a up of 4 or 5 kronor, slightly less in a medium-priced hotel; for the bellman, for carrying three heavy pieces of baggage to the room, 10 kronor. It is not customary to tip the chambermaid, but if she does something special, 4 or 5 kronor. The concierge is tipped only for special service, 10 kronor.

Taxi

As a rule, 10 percent. By law, taxi drivers must give up 8 percent of their tips to the tax anthorities. If the total cost of a journey is 35 kronor, round it off to 40; for a ride costing 250 kronor, the driver would be happy with a total of 270.

DEVIS GREBU

Restaurants Tips are stated on the bills -- 13 percent on top of the total amount. For a meal amounting to 236 kronor (including 13 percent), round it up to 240 or 245 kronor if happy with the ### service. Personal Services

At the barbershop the tip is included in the total cost and there is no need to give anything a fancy place, 200 would be better. In a beauty even in the nicest places. If the service is bad or separately. The tip is also included in the bill at the hairdresser, but if the total comes to 320 only barely adequate, don't tip at all. Taxi drivers don't expect tips. For a guide to tipping kronor, the woman who receives the money would probably expect an additional 5 kronor.

A guide or tour bus driver would not expect a tip, but if good service has been provided, 2 to 3 kronor would be in order. For a three-hour guided tour, about 5 kronor.

NORWAY

The service charge is included in hotel bills, but porters and belimen should be tipped individually, 5 kroner a bag. The same up would satisfy a doorman who hails a taxi; for the chambermaid, 5 to 10 kroner. Ten percent is correct for the driver. Service is also included in restaurant bills, although a little extra is frequently added if the customer is satisfied with the meal and the service. Cloakroom attendants may be given a few kroner, but hairdressers, barbers and theater and cinema ushers are not normally tipped.

FINLAND

Hotels add a 14-percent service charge (15 percent on weekends). Porters and bellmen generally receive 2 markkaa a bag, as does a doorman who hails a taxi. The driver does not expect a tip, but you may round up to the nearest markka. In hotels, if a chambermaid or porter has gone out of the way to please and has performed an additional task, it is often the custom to give a small present or small amount of money, say 10 markkaa. A tip for the chambermaid is optional. Restaurants add the same service charge as hotels. It does not offend to round off the bill upward if the service pleases, but it is not expected. Cloakroom and toilet attendants get 1 or 2 markkaa. Guides, barbers, hairdressers and ushers are

ICELAND

Except for service charges on hotel and restaurant bills, there is no upping in Iceland.

SPAIN

Tipping in Spain is not at the same level as elsewhere in Europe. Many services are ren-dered without expectation of a tip, and moderate tips are usually greatly appreciated. The following list of suggestions reflects the kind of tips a Spaniard would give and consider fair. A generous tourist might want to add a few

pesetas since more is expected from foreigners. Arrival/Hotel

The porter in the airport who helps you with your bags has a set fee for each bag, now about 50 pesetas (30 cents) a bag. If it goes up, he will tell you. The doorman at a hotel who helps you with your bags would consider 100 pesetas a moderate tip, 200 generous. If he gets you a taxi, 25 to 50 pesetas. If you have laundry done at your hotel, a moderate tip to the maid who picks up and delivers it would be 50 pesetas. It s not customary to tip a hotel maid for cleaning your room during a few days' stay. But if you ask her to do something special for you — sewing on a button, fixing a hem, ironing a dress — a 100- to 200-peseta tip would be called for. If your hotel has a concierge who gets you opera or theater tickets, a customary tip would be about 200 to 300 pesetas.

For the trip from the airport to the center of Madrid, Barcelona or most other major Spanish cities, 100 to 150 pesetas. For a short taxi ### ride in town, 25 to 50.

All restaurants in Spain include a service charge in their bills, so the tips in restaurants vary from nothing if the service is not impressive to 5 or 10 percent of the bill if the service is very good. If you sit down for a cup of coffee in a cafe, you are not expected to leave a tip; it is included in the price. If you eat in a top Madrid restaurant and the bill is 12,000 pesetas, an 800-peseta tip would be moderate and a 1,200peseta tip would be generous. The tip in restanrants is not automatic; it really represents an extra thank-you for special service. If you go to a very elegant restaurant, it is not customary to give separate tips to the captain, wine steward, maître d'hôtel and waiter. A tip of about 10 percent of the bill, left at the table, is for all of them pesetas. But tipping the guides of tours is not expected. It is, as in restaurants, an extra. If you take a private car, a tip is more likely to be expected; 300 to 500 pesetas would be approoriate. Usher

It is customary to tip the usher in a theater who shows you to your seat, and the worker in a gas station who fills your tank and checks your water and oil. In both cases give 25 to 50 pescias.

ITALY

Italy is a low-tipping country, and a place where the custom is still considered a reward for good service rather than a toll imposed on the customer whether he is satisfied with what he got or not.

Arrival/Hotel

One thousand lire (about 65 cents) is the normal tip for an airport porter for one or two bags; make it 2,000 if he carries more. The usual tip for people who handle your baggage at no matter what class of hotel is 1,000 line a bag. If the man who carries it also looks like the kind who would get you a taxi on a rainy evening, greater generosity might pay off. One thousand lire to the waiter when you hand him back your signed breakfast bill might reduce the wait for breakfast the following morning. If you have established a friendly relationship with the chambermaid and expect to stay for a few days, give her a couple of thousand lire early on. A thousand lire for sewing on a button is adequate; more, of course, for a long split seam. Otherwise, it is not necessary to tip the maid or to tip for such routine services as laundry and delivery.

Since a good concierge can do a lot of finding of theater or concert tickets or handle the details of rerouting of an airline flight on short notice, find an occasion early in your stay to let him keep the change after he has mailed a postcard for you, and reward him for a special effort, such as a pair of opera tickets after the box office has turned you down. But no tip if you expect no service from him other than handling your key.

The typical long taxi ride, from the airport to the center of the city, is usually at a fixed fee independent of the meter. In that case, no tip is required. For a short ride in the city center, round off the meter fare to the next 1,000 lire or add 500 to 1,000 lire.

Restaurants In the ordinary restaurant, if no special demands are made, 1,000 to 2,000 lire a dinner is a normal tip. If the place is fancy, first check to see if service has already been added. If so, 5,000 line would be all right for two, 10,000 if you have had the rare feeling in such places that you have not been condescended to or browbeaten into ordering what you didn't really want. If no service charge has been added, 10 to 15 percent of the total is fair. If the captain has given you the nice, quiet table you asked for or slipped you alread in the waiting line, 5,000 to 10,000 lire on the way out might get you the same favor the next time.

When having a cup of espresso or a cappuc-cino at what in Italy is called a bar, it is considered good manners to put on the counter, along with the ticket for your order that you have bought at the cashier's desk, a 50- or 100-lire coin.

Personal Services

Service is usually included in barber or beauty-parlor rates, but 1,000 lire extra at a neighborhood barbershop, more in a fancy hotel, is customary. Ten percent of the total bill in an elegant beauty parlor, divided among the various persons who attended you, is welcome.

Two thousand lire a couple would be adequate for the guide in a tour bus; a personal guide for a morning or an afternoon excursion should get 5,000. It is nice to give a thousand or two to the pensioner who has opened the church whose interior is mentioned in the guidebooks in a provincial town.

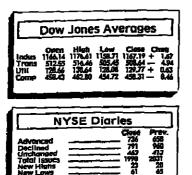

Five hundred or 1,000 line is customary for the usher who shows you and a companion to your places at the theater or cinema.

iling U.S. coal industry.
"The technology holds tremendous promise," said Gary /oelker, director of the alternate fossil fuels program at the U.S. Energy Department, which manages a variety of research pro-

"I am very embusiastic," said Rolf Manired, alternate fuels manager at the Electric Power Research Institute, the utility industry's research arm and a prime sponsor of coal-water studies.

Some proponents go further. "It seems to be the only fuel which has come out of all the high-tech and low-tech efforts to get an easily handled fuel from coal," said Hugh O'Connor, an engineer studying the technology for Boston Edison.

The fuel is much more sophisticated than the coal-water slurries proposed to transport coal through pipelines. Coal in slurries resembles crushed ice. The fragments, thousands of times the coal water fuel coal water for the coal water fuel coal wa the size of the particles used in coal-water fuel, are less dense and much too large to be burned in a liquid or maintained for long in suspension without continuous agitation. "They are two different animals," said Jerome Karaganis, a National Coal Association

There are many advantages to coal-water fuel. Perhaps most important, it substitutes a domestic product, coal, for an imported one, oil. Moreover, because the mixture stays liquid, oilburning plants could save money without adding costly coalhandling and coal-burning equipment.

T hey could also eliminate the need for huge coal storage piles and avoid various environmental problems. In addition, oil storage tanks, pumps and boiler could be used, after equipment changes less costly than those required for full coal conversion. Initially, researchers thought they could accomplish these goals by suspending a large amount of coal in oil. But after several years of research in the mid-1970s, coal-oil mixtures proved largely uneconomic. Only half the oil could be replaced without the mixture becoming too viscous to pump and burn.

So researchers took a different tack: They suspended small grains of coal in water, much like making paint from powder. Unlike making paint, however, the trick was to get as much solid material as possible into the mixture while main

Some work was done with coal-water mixtures in Germany and the Soviet Union from World War II to about 1960, but it flagged because oil was so cheap. # Steel Woes: A Continually Shrinking Market

Steelmakers Failed to Understand 'Industrial Revolution' in Markets

By Steven Greenhouse New York Times Service

NEW YORK -Steel was once the backbone of the U.S. economy. It was no accident that President Harry S. Truman seized the steel mills, or that President John F. Kennedy lashed out at price increases by Roger Blough and U.S. Steel Corp. But nowadays, Big Steel conjures up images of weakness, not power. With each day, it becomes clearer that the industry's plight is neither temporary nor cyclical, but rooted in a simple fact: The United States uses a lot less steel. And the competition, among the giant integrated companies, the importers and the newer mini-mills, is fierce to sell even that amount.

While the economy has grown in the last decade, the consumption of steel has declined. Consumers, who bought their steel-intensive refrigerators and washers years ago, are now buying computers and video games, which use very little steel. Capital spending focuses more on computers than on I-beams. Detroit is making smaller cars, and steel beer cans are but a memory. The United States long ago built much of its steel-intensive infrastructure, such as bridges; the boom in oil drilling is over.

"The sectors of the economy that have been growing fastest the past 20 years are the non-steel sectors," said John B. Corey, chief econo-mist for Armico Inc., one of the largest U.S. steelmakers. "That's what happens in a mature industry in a mature economy that is becoming more service-oriented."

In the decades since Truman feit impelled to seize the steel mills to end a crippling strike, steel has become notably less important to the overall economic order. Between 1950 and 1983, the amount of steel consumed for every $1 million of gross national product has been out in half. It has fallen from 64 tons to 31 tons. (The figures take account

"The markets for steel are experiencing an industrial revolution," said Donald F. Barnett, a steel economist in Washington. "The ratio of steel use to GNP has been declining 3 percent a year since 1970." The severe recession exacerbated this trend. Steel consumption the total demand for steel, whether domestic or foreign-produced - mmeted, to 78 million tons (70.76 metric tons) in 1982 from 113 million in 1979. But while the need for steel rises and falls with the business cycle.

steel experts point out that in each recovery, demand never fully recaptured the previous peak — despite the industry's belated efforts to win back lost markets. In addition to cutting capacity, the industry's latest strategy, like the U.S. automakers', is to concede a certain loss of volume and to move instead toward higher-price, higher-value product lines.

According to Charles A. Bradford, a steel analyst with Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, steel consumption has been dropping by about 10 millon tons from the peak of one recovery to the peak of the next. Thus, steel consumption was 122 million tons in 1973 and 113 million tons in 1979, and steel analysts are estimating that consumption will be below 100 million at the peak of the current

The substitution of other materials for steel is responsible for part of this trend. More concrete is being used in highway bridges, more plastic in cars, and, of course, aluminum has all but displaced steel everage cans.

"Aluminum now has 94 percent of the beverage market, compared with 46 percent in 1976," Mr. Bradford said. While 8.2 million tons of steel were used in all cans in 1974, just 4.6 million tons were used last

LONDON - The Royal Dutch-/Shell Group appears headed for victory in its effort to win 100t control of its U.S. affiliate, Shell Oil Co., Wall Street analysts Royal Dutch said Thursday that about 64.1 million shares had been tendered in response to its offer of $58 a share, or $5.49 billion, for the 30.6 percent of Shell Oil it does not already own. That would give Royal Dutch slightly more than 90 per-cent of Shell Oil.

Orwell's novel, "1984", has impacted upon civilization; his fears proved perceptive. As optimists, we refute Orwell's subservience to despair, to the sordid; to the lower nature of man. Orwellian thought pervades fiscal milieu's; scores of investors are abandoning equities, believing that free enterprise, that freedom itself, may become an anachronism. We inhale the Dawn not the Dusk, taking our cue from Shakespeare, from Hamlet: "What a piece of work is man; how noble in reason, how infinite in faculties in form and moving; how express and admirable in action.

Shakespeare had few illusions; he was essentially addicted to hope; believing that man, with notable exceptions, creates his failures, his triumphs. It has been observed that the difference between man and animal is that man "drinks when he's not thirsty, and makes love in all seasons". To cite Orwellian themes, without an equal dosage of Shakespearlan insights, is negation. Two years ago when the market was being mauled. when the DJI was drooping below 800, our researchers resisted prevailing pessimism, predicting that THE DOW WILL TOUCH 1,000 BEFORE

We were mavericks; bookstores were crammed with pseudo-economic tracts, warning the Public to hoard gold bullion, canned foods, antique commodes, and other collectibles, bedding down for the Apocalypse; commodes, and other collectibles, bedding down for the Apocalypse; warmed in the knowledge that they would be uniquely prepared to fend off the multitudes. The world has not wilted; gold is not $ 1,000 an ounze; people are still dining on pheasant under glass; Visigoths are not storming the gates of Vassar. As a corollary to our vision of a better life; to a revolution of rising expectations, we foresee the DOW vaulting over 2,000, a prophecy that may prove as understated as a financial writer's projection (circa 1905) that "someday 50 000 borseless carriages will clutter up our country".

that "someday, 50,000 horseless carriages will clutter up our country".

Our current letter mirrors rational optimism, selecting shares that may be "acquired" at premium prices; in addition, we highlight incubating equities with the dynamics to display arithmetically progressing gains, equalling or surpassing "special situations" that spiralled more than 400%. ### PETER HALL'S DIARIES

Edited by John Goodwin. 507 pp. $25. Harper & Row, 10 East 53d St., New York, N.Y. 10022

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

FOUNDER of the Royal Shakespeare I Company and current head of the National Theater, Sir Peter Hall has emerged, in the last two and a half decades, as one of England's most important and most controversial men of the theater. The publishing of his diaries created a furor in England last autumn; and while some of this volume's fine points of gossip may escape some readers, anyone interested in the theater should find Hall's diaries as entertaining as they are contentious.

Dictated by Hall into a tape recorder and edited by his colleague John Goodwin, these diaries span the period from March 1972 — when the author was first asked to succeed Laurence Olivier as director of the National to January of 1980. The subtitle of the volume is "The Story of a Dramatic Battle," and Hall's spirited account of his struggle to establish the National in its new home on London's South Bank often does sound like a beleaguered general's report from a distant and bloody was In fact, despite its current success, the National often becomes, in Half's rendition, a kind of metaphor for England — a noble institution, underfinanced, and understaffed; under attack by the left, by Fleet Street, and by the commercial sector, and threatened from within by strikes, managerial disputes, and bureaucratic incompetence. There are scenes of frantic, last-minute negotiations with unions, and of ongoing palace intrigues — secret meetings over a possible merger with the Royal Shakespeare Company, and nasty vol-leying for power between Hall and his asso-ciates, Michael Blakemore, Jonathan Miller, and Olivier.

Remarkably enough, in the midst of all this, Hall is also directing shows and overseeing the daily running of the National's three theaters—something that entails doing everything from soothing auxious writers to coping with child actors stricken by food poisoning. Given all the backstage hassles, it's a wonder some of the shows ever get on.

They do, of course, and running through the diaries, like subplots, are fascinating accounts of such productions as "No Man's Land," "Happy Days" and "Amadeus," as well as narrative riffs in which Hall simply sounds off about assorted dramatists. Hall's aesthetics, of course, form only one subtext in these diaries. Far more dramatic is the rapid deterioration of his state of mind. At first wildly enthusiastic about taking over the National, he quickly grows pessimistic about his ability and desire to run the place at all. Clearly, Hall is wildly overworked — in addition to his duties at the National, he is busy directing and sometimes acting in movies and plays and operas around the world -- and he is soon teetering on the edge of emotional bankrupcy, paranoid and insecure. His marriage falls apart, he is working 18 hours a day, smoking too much and sleeping too little.

"Home tonight feeling awful," reads one entry. "and not wanting to continue with this life or-with this job." By the end, though, the National is off and running, and Hall has begun a new

When writing about colleagues and friends, Hall displays a deft — and in some cases, acerbic — ability to dash off cameo portraits. Olivier, we are told, is part dithering King Lear, reluctant to give up his kingdom, and part Richard III, suspicious and Machiavel-lian. Miller is portrayed as manipulative and verbally promiscuous, talented but in the habit of directing plays as if he were advanc-ing a theory for The New York Review of

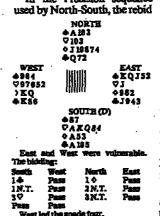

Certainly, the most delightful characters in the book are those two "old lions" - Sir John Gielgud and Sir Ralph Richardson, We meet Gielgud, looking like an "extremely nervous race horse" when confronted with an avantgarde production of "Julius Caesar" in which the men all wear black leather pants. And we meet Richardson, outrageous and charming, as he tells Albert Finney that Hamlet's a cinch just play it like a train, "rush along through cuttings, through stations, through tunnels until he reached his destination," adding, "He must not get off at any of the stations on the way." Such scenes are just extra morsels in what remains, for all the spleen, a deliciously readable book.

Motherhood Forever

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Mother wakes with a slight hangover and a memory of the widower with the this morning?" Mother asks. curly hair who persuaded her to go on to the fourth bourbon at last night's party. Should a mother drink bourbon? Is a mother not human? If you tempt her with a carrly-haired widower, does she not notice that Father's hair is thin, Father's shoulders stooped, Father's wit running to seedy old 45times-told jokes?

Mother hears the splatter of eggs on the kitchen floor below and groans. Father and the children are making breakfast, which means it is Mother's Day again.

Years ago when everyone was young, so young, Mother loved having breakfast in bed on Mother's Day, but in recent years it has become a trial. The children are so big. It had been lovely when those three darling tots could scramble up in the sheets beside her - little Jeff, little Carol, and little Morris - and butter her toast and hand her gifts of dandelions.

If only it were Monday. Mother could scurry out of the house without breakfast, pleading urgent business at the office where the final details of the big Consolidated merger await her decision.

"If only it were Monday," Mother thinks, and makes a note to remind Father to clean the guest bathroom and buy some new curtains for the parlor, as she is expecting the chief of the Omaha branch office for cocktails Wednesday.

Mother's planning is interrupted by the heavy tread of Father and the children on the steps. They enter carrying the ceremonial breakfast before smiles of triumph.

The tray bears a spray of gladiolus blooms. "Am I a sentimental fool to miss the dandelions?" Mother asks herself, and makes a mental note to tell her secretary that she despises gladiolus so that, in the event she dies before Father, the secretary will be able to curb his gladiolus impulse

"How lovely, My Mother's Day breakfast in bed.

Little Jeff and little Morris smile self-consciously, but do not clam-ber onto the bed beside her, for which she is grateful, since Jeff's beard is spotted with egg yolk and Morris weighs 235 pounds.

"Little Carol couldn't make it "She was in Madrid for the weekend with that young man who's studying to be a builfighter and couldn't make it home on time," says Father. "But she sent

Mother makes a mental note to have her secretary speak to Carol, too, in case of a tragic occurrence. The breakfast is the one that long tradition has sanctified: two fried eggs, bacon, buttered toast, coffee. Mother is saddened to think that once she welcomed this breakfast with its deadly freight of cholesterol, nitrites, and sugar. Still, it is sweet of Father to remember.

Or is he up to something? He knows very well that a mother in a high-stress job can keel over at any moment if the old arteries are clogged with conventional breakfast staples. Or does he? He's probably been out of circulation so long he still thinks it's ulcers, rather than coronaries, that do in executives. She gives him a forgiving smile and, for the children's sake, pre-little Jeff. "Just fine, Mama, but she just can't seem to learn to make the bed nice and neat like you used to do." "There's more to a woman than being a nice bed maker," says Mother, repressing a motherly im-pulse to order Jeff to wash the egg out of his beard. Sadly, she realizes that Jeff is a man she would hire only for caretaking work.

"Remember," Morris says, "how you used to say, 'Nobody make a bed like a Mama do?""

Mother does remember that. It is a memory like the memory of dandelions and small tots romping in the bed sheets and tipping the cere-monial eggs onto the pillows.

She is tempted to say, "Motherbood is lovely, but it's not forever." She resists out of respect for their respect for a time that was important to them all. And in her reluctance to tell them that motherhood is only one transient phase of a woman's life, her reinctance to tell them truths that might distress, she realizes that some claims of motherhood are forever inescapable.

Leadville Makes Another Comeback

The Lesson of Baby Doe Is Not Lost on Colorado Mining Town

By Iver Peterson New York Times Service

T EADVILLE, Colorado — Lever since it rose from a rough mining camp to a small red-brick Victorian city high in the Rockies, Leadville has felt like a vo-vo on someone else's finger.

When the price of the silver ore that built the town collapsed in the 1890s. Leadville fell with it. When steel, lead and zinc became crucial in World War II, the town rebounded. When the steel industry shrank early in this decade, the Climax molybdenum mine shut down and 3,000 men lost their jobs.

Leadville's unemployment rate rose to 40 percent in September 1982, the town lost 85 percent of its tax base, at least six businesses failed or left town and housing foreclosures soured.

It is a familiar story in a mountain region spotted with dead and dying mining towns, places where Colorado's economic origins played out and made way for the focus on oil and technology.

But Leadville can claim a small reprieve as automobile workers go back on the job in Detroit, appliance assembly lines are running overtime in Louisville and even the oil and gas industry is starting to buy pipe and steel beams again.

"Moly," as the Climax mine's product is known for short, is an important ingredient in steelmaking, and as U.S. steel mills have geared up to meet demand, the tug of the market has finally been felt in Leadville's valley.

"We feel we have a breathing space to get a grip on our destiny once again, if we can keep our act together long enough to do it," Elaine Kochevar, head of the Leadville Chamber of Commerce, said in explaining how the Climax mine's 19-month shutdown had galvanized the town into looking to the future.

"We are more together as a community now than we ever were before the mine closed," she went on. "When we saw what was coming, how we are dependenton markets that we have no control over, we knew that a unified mining now is the dollars of the

One is the story of Margaret Tobin Brown, the boardinghouse waitress who used her husband's money from the Little Jonny mine as a battering ram against the cold shoulder of Denver's polite society, who made determined tours of Europe to improve her style and who survived the wreck of the Titanic to wind up as a Colorado heroine, "the nsinkable Molly Brown."

The other is the story of Baby Doe Tabor, second wife of H. A. W. Tabor, "the Silver King." They lived on a grand scale until losing their fortune in the silver panic at the turn of the century. On his deathbed Tabor directed Baby Doe to keep their mine, the Matchless, at all costs for the day when silver would again rule the metals markets.

It never did. Baby Doe lived in a cabin by the Matchless, dressed in burlap, until hunger and the cold finally took her. She was buried in 1937 amid considerable pomp as Leadville's most cele- head-to-head with places like

The Leadville Improvement Group is trying to raise money to attract some small manufacturers, but the tourist dollar is regarded as the best bet in the short run at least.

Other declining mining towns have made a go of tourism, including Aspen. In Tombstone, Arizona, re-enactments of the gunfight at the O.K. Corral have aken the place of silver mining as the town's mainstay.

Leadville has bought the old Rio Grande Railroad depot and is negotiating to arrange steam-powered train excursions from there. This summer it will recreate Oro City, a collection of tents, wagons, bough huts and cabins in California Gulch, Leadville's first settlement.

Tabor's Opera House would make a good summer stock theater, the mayor, suggested.

"We don't want it to turn into another Aspen or Durango," O'Neal of the City Council warned. "We want to keep it a mining town topmost, a mining town and not just another tourist

The accident occurred on Dec. 18, 1982, when Makarova, a former star of the Kirov Ballet of Leningrad who defected from the Soviet Union in 1970, was making her musical comedy debut.

He studied economic and social science at the universities of St. Gallen, Switzerland, and Innsbruck, Austria, and works for a private bank in Basel. The palace said the couple met in the summer of 1981 in Greece. Their wedding will probably take place in September. . . . In Zizers, Switzerland, former Empress Zita of Austria, the widow of Emperor Charles, was reported "in very good form" as she turned 92 Wednesday.
